

Physician Referral for Imaging (PET/CT OR CT)

Your physician has made the medical decision to order an imaging study (either a CT scan or PET/CT scan) and considers it medically necessary.

Arizona Blood and Cancer Specialists (ABCS) has been accredited by the American College of Radiology (ACR) as a provider of, and thus can complete, both types of imaging studies. Our accreditation is based on our ability to meet the requirements of ACR's rigorous, objective criteria for image quality, personnel qualifications, and continuing education.

Patients receiving a PET/CT or CT imaging study at ABCS experience seamless care between their medical, surgical and radiation oncologists and our diagnostic imaging specialists.

While ABCS can provide these services to our patients, it is important for our patients know that these imaging studies may also be obtained from other imaging services providers and patients can at all times choose their imaging provider. However, not all imaging providers specialize in cancer care or cancer-related imaging studies and may not be accredited by the American College of Radiology. These are important points to consider in your process of evaluating a provider to perform the studies ordered by your physician.

To assist you with your evaluation, we have provided a list of other providers in the community who also provide imaging services. If you choose to have the imaging study performed at a facility other than ABCS, it will not affect the care you receive from your ABCS physician or care team.

Should it become necessary for additional scans to be ordered later in your treatment, having those scans performed at the same facility, on the same machine will help to maintain consistency and comparability between scans.

If you choose to have your imaging study done by another provider, it is recommended that any additional scans also be done at the same facility.
